Under Construction

Emoticons were originally combinations of keyboard symbols used to represent a facial expression that, in the absence of body language, served to draw a receiver's attention to the tenor or temper of a sender's non-verbal communication. E.g. ":)" - Happy

Emojis are pictorial representations (ideograms or smileys) usually small (18x18 - 22x22 pixel - depending on the font size specified) icons 😊 that fit on a line of text for the same thing.

They originated in Japan and were called kaomojis. The word emoji literally means "picture" (e) + "character" (moji). They now include common objects, places, food and types of weather, activities, animals symbols and other things.

😊 🏠 🚗 🌴 🍊 ☔ 🏃 🐎 Native and Mac OS X and iOS versions are the same.

😊 🏠 🚗 🌴 🍊 ☔ 🏃 🐎 Android versions are also in color.

Newer versions of android have emojis similar to the Native versions.

😊 🏠 🚗 🌴 🍊 ☔ 🏃 🐎 - They are black and white in windows or blue in win 10.

See How they appear in different browsers, email and OSs below.

Most text messaging software has a bunch of these built in.

Terms:

Unicode is a character encoding standard used to encode characters in many scripts (e.g. chinese, arabic, ...).

unicode characters can be cut and pasted into email messages or other documents which support unicode.

Unicode characters are represented internally using UTF-8 character encoding, which uses one to four 8-bit bytes to represent a unicode character.

Emojis were added in Unicode Version 6.0 (2010)
